Five Scopes To Elevate Your Critical Thinking and Leadership

The business world celebrates the forward-looking telescope in strategic problem solving, asking questions like, what does this mean for us in a year, or five years? While there is merit to thinking about the future, four other scopes are required in the VUCA (volatile, uncertain, complex, and ambiguous) environment of work for thoughtful leadership and balanced decision making. Participants will learn the five scopes to elevate their critical thinking and leadership, and master when to apply each scope in any given situation.

Organizational Innovation Across Generations: Use X, Y and Z To Solve Problems Faster

For the first time, five distinct generations are present in our workforce. Diverse generations on teams can sometimes create a generation gap, accompanied by tension. Digital immigrants and natives collide, and preferences (coupled with lack of understanding) can cause division. There is a better way! Understanding generational mindsets and contributions allows us to capture and build on the strengths of each generation. Participants will learn to recognize generational differences and win others' hearts without losing their own values in working relationships.
